Big Nance in the 1960s

Hello Readers,

I was completely surprised when the last ticket to Keeping It Inn sold on September 30th. I am sorry there were many of you who were unable to get tickets. We are considering other venues for more performances in the upcoming months, both locally and other New England towns. I will announce those shows in my newsletter, on FB and on IG.

It is glorious to be back into this show and my mother's story (from my perspective). I have made leaps with the material and character. Having performed at the Whitefire Solofest last January, I have gained so much more confidence that my drifty-over-fifty brain will bring forth a more full story. It reminds me of when I trained for a marathon; once I did a 22-mile training run, I was absolutely certain I would be able to run the 26.2 actual marathon. My brain stopped wondering if it would occur because I had been many miles before. That is how I am feeling about my upcoming performances of Keeping It Inn. I have been able to put more energy into the acting and delivery.

My amazing director, Traci Mariano is here all week to help me with final rehearsals and performances. Even though Traci is familiar with Pierce's Inn, one of the main characters of Keeping it Inn, this is her first time here. Traci and I have worked together for a year and a half, mostly on Zoom.

SEX DRIVE PART 5: HELPING OUT WITHOUT CONDITIONS

Stress and meds can put a damper on sex drive. Stress can be reduced by getting more sleep, meditating, eating healthy food (mostly plants) and exercising as a starting point. It is essential to CHECK WITH YOUR DOCTOR to discuss if and how your medication may impact your sex drive and to discuss options. Never change your dose or stop taking meds without consulting your doctor.
